‘The king came out to meet me; he came near and looked at me, but it was not thought safe for him to climb up on me. At the place where the cart stopped there was an old church. It was the largest building in the whole country. For certain reasons, it had not been used as a church for many years. It had now been made ready for me to use as my house. The great door on the north was four feet high and two feet wide. So, I could go into it by going down on my hand. One of my feet was set in a great ring on the end of many strong strings so that I could not get away, but could only walk some distance outside my door. The country outside looked like a Garden. After some days, the king and his people were convinced that I would not harm them. So, after I agreed to keep certain ‘orders’ of the king, I was allowed to move around.’
